

The following Op-Ed by Joe Kuchta appeared recently in the StarPhoenix:

The ground hasn't been broken yet and already the cost of the future Art Gallery of Saskatchewan is escalating. At its Aug. 18 meeting, city council approved spending $510,000 on design fees for additional floor space and a second level of underground parking estimated to cost $8 million. The $8.51 million would increase the new gallery's price tag to $66.51 million from $58 million. The project is behind schedule. Construction on the underground parking was to begin next year, but has been pushed back to 2012...

Read the full story at the StarPhoenix website